- 4. By letter dated April 12, 1990, the Freedom of Information Co_ordinator of the institution wrote to the requester as follows:

In reference to your clarified access request under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, received on March 15, 1990, the time limit for response is thirty (30) days. We wish to advise you that we have extended the time in this case for an additional one hundred days to July 25, 1990, in accordance with Section 27 of the Act.

The reason for the extension is the request necessitates a search through a large number of records, and that further consultations cannot reasonably be completed within the time limit necessary to comply with the request.

- 5. The requester appealed the head's decision by letter to this office which was received on April 24, 1990. Notice of the appeal was given by this office to the institution and the appellant.
- 6. Upon receipt of the appeal, the Appeals Officer assigned to this case spoke to the institution's Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Co_ordinator in order to ascertain whether the institution would consider giving its response to the appellant's request on a date earlier than that indicated in its letter to the appellant. The Appeals Officer did not receive a response to her query. Accordingly, the Appeals Officer formed the opinion that a mediated settlement of this appeal was not possible.

7. By letter dated May 11, 1990, notice that an inquiry was being conducted was sent to the institution, and representations were requested from the institution as to the reasons and factual basis for its decision to extend the time to respond to the request. The appellant was also notified of the inquiry, and given the opportunity to comment on the issues raised by the appeal.

8. I have received representations from the institution, and have considered them in making my Order.

The sole issue for me to determine in this appeal is whether the extension of time claimed by the institution as necessary to respond to the request, is reasonable in the circumstances.

Subsection 27(1) of the Act states as follows:

A head may extend the time limit set out in section 26 for a period of time that is reasonable in the circumstances, where,

- (a) the request is for a large number of records or necessitates a search through a large number of records and meeting the time limit would unreasonably interfere with the operations of the institution; or
- (b) consultations that cannot reasonably be completed within the time limit are necessary to comply with the request.

I have received detailed representations from the institution regarding the circumstances which led to the head's decision to extend the time for a response to the request.

In its representations, the institution provided information as to the volume of the records at issue in this appeal, the search necessary to locate and identify the records, the consultations contemplated and the reasons why compliance with the 30 day time limit would have unreasonably interfered with the operations of the institution.

The institution states that the records are contained in 13 banker's boxes, which hold approximately 800 pages each. Therefore the records at issue in this appeal involve an estimated total of 9,600 pages. Locating the records necessitated a search through six branches of the institution.

The institution submits that the requested information is contained in "complex and contentious" documents which require review by experienced counsel with first_hand knowledge of the contents. The task of identifying and reviewing the records has been assigned to the General Counsel for the institution. Counsel has been assisted in this task by other members of the institution's Freedom of Information office.

In regard to the issue of consultations, the institution submits that both internal and external consultations are necessary before it can respond to the request. Many of the records originated with other institutions, and there is a need to consult to ensure that confidential or privileged information is not wrongfully disclosed. The institution contemplates consultations with 14 external institutions and agencies.

The institution submits that it was unable to complete the tasks of locating, identifying and reviewing the record, consulting with other institutions and making a decision regarding access to the requested records within the statutory 30 day period because to do so would have interfered unreasonably with the operations of the institution. It argues that the operations of the Freedom of Information office would have been interfered with to the extent that the staff of the Freedom of Information office would have been unable to meet the deadlines on other requests or mediate other appeals.

Further, the institution submits that had General Counsel devoted the time required to review the record and render a decision within the statutory 30 day period, he would have had to devote his entire time to this task. This would have resulted in interference with his other litigation commitments

so that the provision of legal services to the Ontario

Government would have been prejudiced, the rights of private counsel and litigants compromised and the judiciary

"inconvenienced".

In reviewing the information which the institution has provided with respect to the factors which form the basis of its decision to extend the time for a response, I am of the view that its decision to extend the time for a response by 100 days is reasonable in the circumstances.

The institution has indicated in its representations that it will attempt to respond to the request on a date earlier than the extended deadline of July 25, 1990. Accordingly, despite my finding that the head's decision is reasonable, I am hopeful that the institution will find itself in a position to respond to the request on an earlier date.

In conclusion, I uphold the head's decision.
