

IN THE TERRITORIAL COURT OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

IN THE MATTER OF:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

VS

B K C

Transcript of the Reasons for Judgment of the Honourable Judge B. A. Bruser, sitting at Yellowknife in the Northwest Territories, on Wednesday, March 1st, A.D., 1995.

APPEARANCES:

MS. M. NIGHTINGALE:

Counsel for the Crown

MS. S. KAYE:

Counsel for the Defence

1 THE CLERK: B K C .

2 THE COURT: This is set for judgment. Is there
3 anything more from the Crown?

4 MS. NIGHTINGALE: No, there is not, Your Honour.

5 THE COURT: Anything more from the Defence?

6 MS. KAYE: No, sir.

7 THE COURT: Then I will now deliver the reasons 8 for judgment.

9 The accused is charged in a single count 10 information. He is charged with sexually assaulting 11 his sister who is now 30 years of age. The Crown
12 elected to proceed by indictment. The accused elected 13 to be tried in this court on November 15, 1994, and on 14 the same date he pled not guilty.

15 The alleged incident relates to the period on or 16 between February 1, 1992, and the 28th day of February 17 of that year. The incident, it is said, arose in 18 Inuvik. The trial evidence occurred in Inuvik.
19 Submissions were heard there. The matter was 20 adjourned to Yellowknife for the reasons for judgment 21 in order to accommodate the accused.

22 The first witness for the Crown was the 23 complainant whose mental capacity was challenged by 24 the Defence. The challenge was made pursuant to 25 Section 16 of the Canada Evidence Act. Upon being 26 advised of the challenge, the court conducted an 27 inquiry to determine whether the complainant

1 understood the nature of an oath or solemn 2 affirmation, and whether she was able to communicate 3 the evidence.

4 I concluded that the complainant did not 5 understand the nature of an oath or a solemn 6 affirmation by reason of being mentally challenged.
7 However, I permitted her to testify on promising to 8 tell the truth. I did so because I decided that the 9 complainant was able to communicate the evidence. The 10 concept of a promise was carefully explained to her.
11 She appeared to understand what this meant following 12 the explanation and she appeared in my view to 13 comprehend the concept of telling the truth.

14 The mere fact that the complainant testified on 15 promising to tell the truth instead of under oath does 16 not mean that for this reason alone her testimony 17 should be afforded less weight. Nevertheless, I have 18 assessed and weighed her evidence with extreme caution 19 given her mental difficulties.

20 The difficulty she had translated into 21 difficulties by counsel in their examination and 22 cross-examination of her. This is part of the reason 23 why I have felt obligated to assess and weigh her 24 evidence with extreme caution.

25 The complainant says that the accused had sexual 26 intercourse with her during the month of February, 27 1992, at the home of her parents in Inuvik. She says

1 that she was in her bedroom at the time and that she 2 awakened to find the accused on top of her. He had 3 pulled her pants and panties down and his pants and 4 his underpants were down. She testified that the 5 accused was drunk.

6 The manner in which the complainant described what 7 happened to her was partly through the use of the 8 language "he had sex with me", and, quote: "he fucked 9 me".

10 The balance of the evidence respecting the sexual 11 activity was communicated by means of anatomically 12 correct dolls used for demonstration purposes. This 13 occurred during the case for the Crown.

14 The complainant repeated many times the words "he 15 had sex with me". However, she could not despite many 16 questions explain what this meant. I conclude that 17 she could not do so because of her mental difficulties 18 and her limitations.

19 It was for this reason that the court permitted
20 the Crown to use the male doll and the female doll.
21 It was after the demonstration that the complainant
22 said "he fucked me".

23 I noticed that when given the dolls the 24 complainant rapidly and without any hesitation 25 whatsoever partially undressed them, and that she 26 positioned the male doll on top of the female doll.
27 The dolls were then by her positioning and with no

1 leading questions lying down and facing each other.
2 The complainant showed how the accused had sexual 3 intercourse with her by moving the pelvic area and the 4 buttocks of the male doll up and down. The panties of 5 the female doll were down and the genitals of the male 6 doll were exposed.

7 The female doll was dressed differently from the 8 way the complainant testified she was dressed at the 9 material time. I don't know if there is anything of 10 tremendous significance in this given the state of the 11 underwear as demonstrated by the complainant.

12 After the demonstration the complainant testified 13 that she did not want her brother to do this to her.
14 She testified that she told him to get away from her,
15 and that at some point in the bedroom, he told her not 16 to call out to their parents. At around the time he 17 was beginning to have the act with her, he said, 18 according to her, "have sex with me". She said that 19 after he used those words, and after he got on top of 20 her, she told him to get off. When she told him that, 21 he held onto her.

22 After the intercourse she says she wanted to go to 23 the bathroom but could not do so immediately because 24 the accused locked the door of her bedroom.

25 Cross-examination of the complainant did not 26 reveal anything of significance in the way of 27 inconsistencies or inherent contradictions. She

1 remained at the end of her testimony steadfast that 2 the events occurred during the month of February, 3 1992, and not during any other month, and that the 4 events did occur as she described.

5 During early 1992, the complainant was living at 6 the home of V . R . . This was in Inuvik, and as 7 the court can take judicial notice of, the distances 8 in Inuvik are close, and one can readily walk from any 9 part of Inuvik to any other part of the community.

10 The accused was living at his parents' home in 11 Inuvik where the complainant said the sexual 12 intercourse against her will occurred.

13 There is evidence from the accused and from the 14 mother of the accused and complainant that the 15 complainant often visited at the home of her parents 16 even though she was not allowed to do so. She was not 17 allowed or permitted to do so because of a court 18 proceeding against her father which was then pending.
19 Suggestions became apparent during this trial that the 20 matter involving her father involved an alleged 21 incident in which the complainant was the victim.

22 There is nothing in the evidence of the 23 complainant to show that anyone instilled fantasies in 24 her about what her brother did. There is nothing in 25 her evidence to show that she picked up on an idea for 26 fabrication from television, movies, magazines, dreams
27 or from discussions from others apart from perhaps her

1 boyfriend Walter, and I will have something shortly to 2 say about her relationship with him.

3 On numerous occasions the complainant followed 4 almost a ritual. She repeated that the accused had 5 sex with her, that it was true, and that she 6 remembered it. When she testified that she recalled
7 the event, she would usually point to the right side 8 of her head. This was, as should be apparent now, an 9 unsophisticated witness. I would have thought that if 10 she were fabricating a story, cross-examination would 11 have either revealed it or would have revealed 12 significant cracks and crevasses.

13 By the end of the testimony of the complainant, I
14 could detect no animosity by her toward her brother 15 apart from the reasonable indignation by her toward 16 him about what he had done to her. This would only 17 occur during her testimony from her demeanor and in 18 the way of answering questions when she was asked 19 about the actual act itself. There is no concrete 20 evidence that I am prepared to accept or which raises 21 a reasonable doubt that there was any other purpose 22 for making up a story.

23 I was especially impressed by her evidence that 24 the accused was not supposed to do what he did do her 25 because of the brother-sister relationship. Her 26 testimony, I conclude, is such that she honestly 27 believed what she was telling the court.

1 However, the question remains: does this honest
2 belief on her part translate into proof beyond a 3 reasonable doubt bearing in mind that the Crown has 4 the onus throughout to prove each and every material 5 element of the charge?

6 The accused has no onus at all to establish his 7 innocence. Where there are contradictory versions of 8 what occurred, the court does not have to choose one 9 over the other. At the end of the day after an 10 assessment and weighing of all the evidence which the 11 court accepts, if the court has on the totality of the 12 evidence a reasonable doubt, the accused has to be 13 found not guilty.

14 In arriving at a verdict, the court cannot engage 15 in speculation or conjecture. The courts often make 16 this remark. I now want to explore in more depth than 17 is common what this means.

18 Speculation is the art of theorizing about a 19 matter as to which the evidence is insufficient.
20 Conjecture is where there is a slight degree of 21 credence to be given a matter, but which arises from 22 evidence too weak or too remote to cause belief. The 23 latter is rather like a supposition or a surmise. In 24 popular language, conjecture is guess work. The 25 purpose of going on about speculation and conjecture 26 will shortly become evident.

27 The difficulty with the testimony of the accused

1 is that he began his testimony by saying that nothing
2 happened between himself and his sister. He appeared 3 firm. He said that in 1992 he never had any problems
4 with his sister. On cross-examination he testified 5 that he did not have sexual intercourse with the 6 complainant. He repeated his denial when pressed by 7 Crown counsel.

8 Crown counsel did not end the cross-examination 9 with this denial. Mr. MacDonald, who was Crown at the 10 time, and who is not the Crown now before the court, 11 drew upon his years of experience at the bar by 12 pressing the accused. Upon being pressed further, the 13 accused testified that he did not remember going into 14 the room of his sister one night in 1992 and having 15 sexual intercourse with her. When pressed further by 16 Crown counsel he said that he did not know if the 17 event occurred. Then he repeated that he did not 18 remember. He also said during the cross-examination 19 that he could not be sure whether or not he had sexual 20 intercourse with his sister.

21 Crown counsel was understandably wondering how it 22 could be that the accused could not remember and did 23 not know and could not be sure, so he asked the 24 accused if he had blackouts in the past when he had 25 been drinking. The evidence of the accused was that 26 from time to time he would black out to the point of 27 not remembering events.

1 In my view it was very fair of Crown counsel to 2 afford the accused an opportunity to explain how he 3 could not remember and how he could not be sure. This 4 is the type of cross-examination which this court 5 commends and which the court encourages of Crown and 6 Defence counsel.

7 The accused after the exchange with Crown counsel 8 continued to testify that he could not be sure if the 9 sexual intercourse occurred. The court permitted him
10 to clarify his bad memory if he could with the court 11 asking him why he could not be sure if he had 12 intercourse with his sister. His answer: "I don't 13 remember".

14 Intertwined with the defence of denial, which 15 turned into lack of recollection and uncertainty, is 16 the defence of alibi. The alibi is simple. The 17 theory of the Defence was that the accused left Inuvik
18 at the latest in early February, 1992. It is argued 19 that if he was out of Inuvik when the complainant says 20 the sexual intercourse occurred, then he could not 21 have committed the crime if in fact any crime was 22 committed.

23 The approach to alibi evidence in law is 24 not complicated. The Ontario Court of Appeal set out 25 the following principles in the well known case of the 26 Crown against Parrington, 1985, 20 C.C.C. (3d), 184:
27 1. if the court believes an alibi, it has to acquit.

1 2. if the court does not believe an alibi, but has 2 a reasonable doubt about it, the court must acquit.
3 Finally, if the court does not have a reasonable doubt 4 about alibi evidence, then the court must look at all 5 the evidence of the Defence and of the Crown to 6 determine if the Crown has proven its case beyond a 7 reasonable doubt.

8 There is a major difficulty with the alibi 9 evidence of B C . The Defence evidence in its 10 totality allows for the departure of the accused from 11 Inuvik during the early days of February, 1992. The 12 Defence does not say exactly when in February he would 13 have left, and it is evident from the testimony that 14 at the end of the first week at the latest in February 15 he did leave Inuvik. It cannot be said that he was 16 away from Inuvik all of February or in Inuvik all of 17 February.

18 I approach the matter on the basis that the 19 accused was in Inuvik at the latest during the first 20 few days of February, 1992. The complainant does not 21 say exactly when in February the incident took place, 22 but she testified that it was a Friday night at about 23 2:30 a.m. S said she went to bed on Friday night at 24 2:00 a.m. In my view, it is appropriate to draw an 25 inference that she meant Saturday at 2:00 a.m. when 26 she went to bed, and Saturday at 2:30 a.m. when the 27 event occurred.

1 I say this because there really is no such time as 2 2:00 Friday night, or 2:30 Friday night. We have 2:00
3 and 2:30 in the afternoon seven days a week, and we 4 have 2:00 in the morning and we have 2:30 in the 5 morning seven days a week. But even though 2:00 a.m.
6 and 2:30 a.m. are technically in the morning, because 7 they are in the early a.m., many people would call 8 that nighttime.

9 If according to the calendar the complainant went 10 to bed on Friday night, i.e. Saturday morning at 2:00 11 a.m., the second or following inference that can be 12 drawn, should the court choose to do so, is that the 13 complainant meant Saturday morning, February 1, 1992.
14 The evidence is very much alive that the accused was 15 in Inuvik at least to that date, if not a few days 16 longer.

17 There is evidence that the complainant began to go 18 out with a man named W . The surname I believe is 19 H . I referred to him briefly earlier in these 20 reasons, and said I would have more to say about him
21 later. I now turn to his involvement.

22 The complainant began to go out with him in April, 23 1994. The complainant talked to the police about the 24 February 1992 matter in July 1994 which was after she 25 began to go out with W . When she first spoke to 26 the R.C.M. Police, they gave to her some paper on 27 which to write out what happened. Oddly, they gave

1 her the paper to take away. She took the paper to her
2 boyfriend who, it appears from the evidence, wrote 3 down the details of the complaint. I gather the 4 police became involved in more earnest at a later
5 date. Therefore there was no police officer available 6 when the complaint was first reduced to writing.

7 W H was not called as a witness. There
8 is no evidence about his character. We do not know 9 whether or not he took down the details accurately. We 10 do not know if in some way he introduced thoughts into 11 the mind of the complainant which were in the nature 12 of suggestion, fantasy or exaggeration, or some 13 combination of all three. We do not know why the 14 police handled the initial complaint in the manner 15 they did when it first came to their attention. Even 16 if W H was required in the investigation in 17 order that the complainant could be understood and 18 keeping in mind that she is very difficult to 19 understand, why would the complaint have not been done
20 in the presence of a police officer? The evidence 21 remains silent.

22 I do not draw any inference adverse to either the 23 Crown or Defence by reason of the absence of W 24 H . I do remark on the obvious. He may have had 25 material evidence to give. I now tie this into the 26 definitions of conjecture and speculation.

27 The court cannot engage in either. The court

1 therefore cannot engage in speculation or conjecture
2 as to what the evidence of W H may or may not 3 have been.

4 Crown counsel argued that it is not the statement 5 which is on trial, the statement not being in 6 evidence. This is a correct observation. Obviously 7 it is the accused on trial, but does the explanation
8 advance the case for the Crown in any way at all?

9 The Crown has the burden of proof as I have said 10 two or three times already. Nevertheless, without any 11 evidence showing that W H in some way did or 12 did not influence the state of mind of the complainant 13 to any degree, I am unable to do much in the 14 assessment and weighing of the lack of W H's 15 evidence unless I engage in speculation or conjecture.
16 I can't do so in law.

17 What emerges as significant at the end of the 18 assessment and weighing process is the unshaken and 19 solid testimony of the complainant that the accused 20 had sexual intercourse with her in February 1992, and 21 the evidence of the accused to the effect that he 22 didn't do so, is not sure, and can't remember.

23 I am not prepared to find a reasonable doubt on 24 the totality of the evidence, nor from the 25 complainant's mental capacity alone with respect to 26 her credibility, nor do I find a reasonable doubt on 27 the alibi evidence alone or on the totality of the evidence.

This leads the court to the logical conclusion that on the totality of the evidence which I accept (after having assessed and weighed it), I do not find a reasonable doubt. If the accused had remained firm in his denial, if Crown counsel had not pressed the accused as he did and elicited the answers which were given, I would most likely have acquitted him.

In this case, the cross-examination of Crown counsel was exemplary, and did shatter in my view any reasonable doubt arising from the testimony of the accused. I find the accused guilty as charged.
