

IN THE TERRITORIAL COURT OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

IN THE MATTER OF:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

- and -

RAYMOND RABESCA

Transcript of the Reasons for Judgement and Reasons for Sentence delivered by The Honourable B. A. Bruser, sitting in Wha Ti, in the Northwest Territories, on the 17th day of April, A.D. 1998.

APPEARANCES:

MR. S. COUPER: On behalf of the Crown

MR. L. STANG: On behalf of the Defence

Charge under ss. 270(1)(a) C.C. and 264.1(1)(a) FILED

1 THE COURT: We have everyone in place. It is now
2 5:30 p.m. It has been a long day in a confining 3 place. The room we are in is small and it has been 4 packed to capacity with standing room only throughout 5 the afternoon. It is hot in here. The air is not 6 particularly fresh. The accused is in custody. In my 7 view, it is better to push it a little longer even 8 though those of us who are free may have to bear with 9 me while I take a while to deliver the judgment.
10 Better to do this than to keep the accused in custody
11 longer awaiting the judgment to be given at some date
12 that I cannot even determine right now with a measure 13 of certainty.

14 I have had the opportunity, as I said in the 15 absence of the accused a few minutes ago, to assess and 16 to weigh the evidence in more depth than I could have 17 done during the trial. As I said earlier, the evidence 18 cannot be adequately assessed and weighed until it is 19 all in and until the lawyers have made their final 20 arguments.

21 Because of the physical difficulties in sitting 22 this late and the circumstances which I have outlined,
23 I reserve a right to give a measure of reasonable 24 editing to the judgment if a transcript is prepared for 25 whatever purpose at a later date.

26 The charges before the Court are that the accused 27 Raymond Rabesca, on or about March 5th, 1998, at

1 Wha Ti, assaulted Constable Hendriks who is a peace 2 officer and who was, at the material time, engaged in 3 the execution of his duty. The second and remaining 4 charge is that the accused on the same date, again in 5 Wha Ti, knowingly uttered a threat to the same officer 6 to kill him and his family.

7 The Crown elected to go summarily on both matters,
8 to which the accused pled not guilty. The significance 9 in proceeding summarily is mainly two-fold: First, in 10 proceeding that way the Crown has prevented, and 11 properly so as the Crown is entitled to do, the accused 12 from choosing where he wished to be tried. The second 13 significance in proceeding summarily is that if there 14 are convictions, the penalty available to the Court is 15 less than had the Crown proceeded by indictment. This 16 is what is meant by proceeding summarily. There are 17 other niceties that involve the two ways of proceeding
18 which are not particularly significant for my purposes 19 today.

20 In determining whether the prosecution has proven
21 its case beyond a reasonable doubt, on Count 1 there 22 are two sections of the Criminal Code of Canada that 23 are particularly important. These have been referred 24 to by both lawyers in their able submissions. Counsel 25 have presented their respective interests thoroughly, 26 fairly, and at times I might add, in a dogged but 27 reasonable way.

1 One of the sections is Section 29. Section 29 is 2 loosely called the duty of a person arresting another.
3 Subsection (2) is significant for the purposes of Count 4 1. It provides that it is the duty of every one who 5 arrests a person without a warrant to give notice to 6 that person where it is feasible to do so of the reason
7 for the arrest. There are other parts to subsection 8 (2) which are not important for this case. If it is 9 not feasible to give notice to the person of the reason 10 for the arrest, the person making the arrest does not 11 have to do so.

12 Section 29 covers everyone, both peace officers
13 and people who are not peace officers. An illustration 14 of where it may not be feasible to give notice of the 15 reason would be if a peace officer attended upon a 16 scene, was immediately attacked and had to react 17 accordingly. It could not be reasonably expected that 18 the officer would, in this example, be required in law 19 to explain why the arrest was being made. That would 20 have to come afterward. There could be many other 21 illustrations of where it may not be feasible to do 22 so. I give this one only.

23 The other section that is of consequence for Count
24 1, the assault of a peace officer, is Section 495. It 25 provides that:

26 A peace officer may arrest without a
27 warrant
 (a) a person who has committed an indictable offence or who, on

1 reasonable grounds, he believes has 2 committed or is about to commit an 3 indictable offence.
4 (b) a person whom he finds committing 5 a criminal offence; or...

6 Paragraph (c) is not of significance.

7 Subsection (2) sets out certain requirements.
8 However, if those requirements are not met to the 9 letter of the law, subsection (3) provides that in 10 spite of what subsection (2) requires, a peace officer
11 acting under subsection (1), which I have just gone 12 over in some detail, is deemed to be acting lawfully 13 and in the execution of his duty for the purposes of 14 any proceedings under the Criminal Code of Canada. I 15 have paraphrased the last part of this remark.

16 I return to subsection (2), paragraph (a). A 17 peace officer cannot arrest a person without a warrant 18 for an indictable offence mentioned in Section 553.
19 That has to do with the indictable offences that fall 20 within the exclusive authority of this Court and for 21 which the accused might not have an election. Mischief
22 is included in that category. Mischief is the offence 23 that Constable Hendriks says he arrested the accused 24 for. The particular mischief in question was 25 interfering with the lawful use or enjoyment of 26 property, although the officer used the words in 27 evidence, "precluding the lawful use", et cetera, of property.

1 Paragraph (b) of subsection (2) provides that the 2 officer cannot arrest without warrant for what is 3 called a hybrid offence, that is an offence for which 4 the person may be prosecuted by indictment or on 5 summary conviction. Again, mischief is in that 6 category. But if the Crown elected to go by 7 indictment, then paragraph (a) would also apply because 8 it is an absolute jurisdiction offence.

9 Finally, if an offence is a straight summary 10 conviction offence, an officer cannot arrest without 11 warrant.

12 An officer can arrest for an offence in any of the 13 above categories if it is necessary to do so to 14 establish the identity of a person, which clearly is 15 not the case here; to secure or preserve evidence, 16 which is clearly not the case here; or to prevent the 17 continuation or repetition of the offence or the 18 commission of another offence.

19 Paragraph (e) is linked to paragraph (d).
20 Paragraph (e) applies where the officer has no 21 reasonable grounds to believe that if he does not so 22 arrest the accused, the accused will fail to attend 23 court. That paragraph is not applicable because we're 24 not dealing with a failure to attend court in the mind 25 of the officer.

26 So there you have it. Those are the two important 27 provisions that the lawyers have argued and which I

1 have given my consideration to.

2 Another provision of the Criminal Code that is 3 relevant, apart from the mischief one which I have 4 touched upon, is Section 30. It provides that every 5 one who witnesses a breach of the peace is justified in 6 interfering to prevent the continuance or renewal of 7 it, and a person acting under Section 30 has the 8 authority, by reason of Section 30, to detain such an 9 individual for the purpose of giving him into the 10 custody of a peace officer. In doing so, no more force 11 than is necessary can be used.

12 The police have certain powers at common-law which 13 I will now address.

14 I gave both lawyers an opportunity to read my 15 computer annotation based on my understanding of an 16 Ontario Court of Appeal judgment of R. v. Godoy (1997), 17 115 C.C.C. (3d) 272. The facts in that case are, in 18 some ways, similar to what I am dealing with. As I go 19 through Godoy, I will be making some remarks to 20 incorporate the present case into the principles set 21 out in Godoy, which I find to be sound law.

22 In that case, the police answered a disconnected 23 911 call and entered the home of the accused against 24 his wishes. There is no ability on the part of people 25 in Wha Ti or elsewhere in the Northwest Territories to 26 dial 911. People dial the number of the local 27 detachment and, if it is an emergency, they hope that a

1 person will answer and that they will not get a tape
2 recording or be forwarded on to Yellowknife.

3 In this case, Constable Hendriks answered a
4 complaint to attend at the accused's home. The call 5 came from a lawful occupant of the home, an 6 18-year-old, who's the sister of the accused.
7 Constable Hendriks entered the home after knocking and 8 immediately the accused told him to leave in no 9 uncertain terms. In this way, the opening facts of 10 what I am dealing with are similar, but not identical, 11 to that in Godoy. There really though is no major 12 distinction between what the officer in Godoy was 13 facing and what Constable Hendriks was facing. I will 14 say more about what Constable Hendriks was responding 15 to in a few moments.

16 The Court in Godoy held that the police have a 17 power at commonlaw to enter a private home in response 18 to a disconnected 911 call. The Court of Appeal found 19 that when the police entered the home of the accused to 20 investigate a disconnected call, they were acting in 21 the course of their duty - and herein lies the 22 significance of the principle to what I am dealing with 23 - in the course of their duty to protect life, which 24 obviously includes preventing death and serious 25 injury. The Court of Appeal found that the police had 26 a reasonable belief that someone inside the home was in 27 serious distress and that his or her life or safety

1 might be in danger. In my view, it is not necessary 2 when the police are responding to an emergency call and 3 feel that they have to immediately enter a home for 4 them to believe that someone's life is at imminent 5 risk.

6 The Court of Appeal chose the language of "life" 7 or "safety". There is evidence in this case from 8 Constable Hendriks and from Darla Rabesca, the 9 accused's sister, that the accused was behaving in a 10 violent way or about to do so.

11 The Court of Appeal in Godoy went on to hold that 12 entry in that case was necessary to determine the cause 13 of the distress and to give aid, if necessary. The 14 Court was identifying a two-fold interest that the 15 police had a legitimate right to investigate: First, 16 to investigate the cause of the distress; and, second,
17 to give aid, if necessary.

18 Constable Hendriks was called out to the home. He 19 was called out in response to a complaint which 20 included alleged behaviour by the accused of violence 21 towards someone else in that home. It would not have 22 been reasonable for the officer to hang about in the 23 yard or on an outside deck. While one might say that 24 he ought to have knocked and called out "Police", even 25 if he had done so in the circumstances that he was 26 responding to, which I find to have been proven by the 27 Crown, the presence or absence of the word "Police" is

1 immaterial. The officer had to get into the home in a 2 hurry. He knocked and he entered. It must be 3 remembered at all times that it was an occupant of the 4 home who had placed the call telling the officer to get 5 over there.

6 Godoy further sets out the principle that in 7 determining if the exercise of police powers was 8 justifiable, the Court must look at the totality of the 9 circumstances surrounding the exercise of the power. I 10 have already indicated that I have done this in the 11 context of why it is that the officer went over to the 12 home. I will flush that out in more depth shortly.

13 It is of interest to note that in Godoy the Court 14 remarked that the officers only walked in the door.
15 That's all Constable Hendriks did, he only walked in 16 the door. In Godoy, it was found as a fact that before 17 entry was made an officer in police uniform announced 18 his intention to enter. Constable Hendriks was dressed 19 in, for the most part, police uniform. He had the 20 basics - the coat identifying him as a peace officer, I 21 infer, and the shirt. He had jeans on. The accused 22 knew him. The accused knew him to be a peace officer.
23 There could be no doubt that the accused knew who he 24 was and the officer did knock before entering.

25 Godoy, finally, sets out the principle that there 26 is a compelling public interest in the police 27 responding promptly and effectively to emergency

1 calls. It would be doing a disservice to the public
2 for a court to hold otherwise. The police, as everyone 3 recognizes, are present to serve and to protect. In 4 this case, Constable Hendriks served and he was trying 5 to protect.

6 I turn my attention now to the evidence in more
7 detail. I have reviewed all of it. I shall not review
8 all of it in these oral reasons. I intend to highlight 9 the significant portions of the evidence as it applies
10 to the law, and once I have linked my findings of fact 11 to the law, I will pronounce judgment.

12 As I said earlier, I have weighed and assessed the 13 evidence. Credibility is an issue here. It has been 14 raised by the defence repeatedly through 15 cross-examination and defence evidence and in 16 argument.

17 The way to assess credibility has been set out by 18 the Supreme Court of Canada in a case called D.W. The 19 principles are, if I believe the accused, he would have 20 to be found not guilty. This applies in particular to 21 Count number 2 but is a principle to be taken into 22 account in Count number 1. One count is not more 23 important than the other, but there are issues which 24 are at least equally important to both counts. They 25 have to do with those sections of the Criminal Code 26 that I have already gone over. If I do not believe the 27 accused but if his evidence leaves me with a reasonable

1 doubt, I would have to find him not guilty. If I do 2 not believe the accused and if his evidence does not 3 raise a reasonable doubt, I still have to consider all 4 of the evidence in the trial to determine if the Crown 5 has proven its case beyond a reasonable doubt, which is 6 the test that it has to meet. There is no onus on the 7 accused to prove anything on Count 1 or on Count 2, but 8 credibility has been raised and it is an issue which I 9 have addressed my mind to with the Supreme Court of 10 Canada principles very much in mind.

11 Constable Hendriks arrived in Wha Ti in August of 12 1997. He has known the accused since October of 1997.
13 This places his knowledge of the accused to about five 14 months before March 5th, 1998. He knows where the 15 accused lives. He knows who lives in that home. This 16 is the home I find that the Constable attended to in 17 response to the complaint. He had been asked by the 18 accused's mother, who was out of Wha Ti, to keep an eye 19 on the home. He had received similar requests to keep 20 an eye on the home in the past when the accused had 21 been drinking. The officer agreed to do so.

22 On the evening of March 4th, 1998, Constable 23 Hendriks received a message from his wife to keep an 24 eye on the home. He then spoke to the accused's sister 25 Darla. She was concerned that the accused was out and 26 might be drinking. Constable Hendriks advised her to 27 lock the door and to call him if there was a problem.

1 This is important because it sets the scene in the mind
2 of the officer who had to have reasonable and probable 3 grounds if he was going to effect an arrest of the 4 accused in the home.

5 At about midnight, Darla called to say she had 6 information that the accused had been drinking. This 7 is not evidence that counts against the accused in any 8 way; it is evidence simply that goes to the state of 9 mind of Constable Hendriks and nothing more. At 5:25
10 a.m., Darla called to say the accused was there. She 11 asked Constable Hendriks to come over. She said the 12 accused was drunk, swearing, and that he was being 13 violent. She was whispering. Surely, it is reasonable 14 for the officer hearing a whispered voice to conclude 15 that there were problems over at that home and that he 16 had best get over there as quickly as possible. Darla 17 did not say: "Get over as quickly as possible", but 18 when one looks at all the circumstances up to that 19 point, including the whispering and what was said, the 20 officer knew, as any reasonable peace officer would, 21 that he had best get over there and investigate. So he 22 did exactly that. He knocked on the door, opened it 23 and stepped into the hallway. He was confronted by the 24 accused. The accused was swearing. It is noteworthy 25 that the officer had received a complaint which 26 included an allegation of the accused swearing and that 27 Constable Hendriks attended at the home to find him

1 doing so.

2 Upon entering the home, Constable Hendriks
3 confirmed with the accused's 23-year-old brother Curtis 4 that he wanted the accused out of the home. Darla was 5 not in that particular area of the home. If the 6 officer was going to remove the accused from the home, 7 it was very wise of him to speak to another occupant of 8 the home, someone who was not drunk and swearing, and 9 ask if that occupant (in this case the accused's 10 brother) wanted the accused removed. What else could 11 the officer do? I don't think he could have done 12 anything more at that time. Perhaps he could have 13 grabbed the accused and started taking him out of the 14 home without asking, but in my view it was incumbent 15 upon him to make a further inquiry which he did before 16 taking any further action.

17 The accused was verbally abusive and in a highly 18 intoxicated state. Constable Hendriks knows the 19 accused when sober and when intoxicated. The accused 20 was, I find as a fact, intoxicated and heavily so, but 21 not to the point where he did not know what he was 22 saying or who the officer was or what Constable 23 Hendriks was saying.

24 Constable Hendriks, in my view, took a reasonable 25 approach, which is one I see time and again used by 26 peace officers throughout the Northwest Territories.
27 He tried to coax the accused into coming with him in a

1 peaceful manner. The significance of this is that if 2 the police behave like bulls they can expect to be met 3 head-on in many cases by another bull and the 4 head-butting will begin. The officer behaved more like 5 a lamb. He tried to be peaceful. '

6 The incident got worse, unfortunately, from that 7 point on, but not, I find, through any fault of the 8 officer. It got worse because things were happening 9 quickly. The officer faced a volatile accused who was 10 noted to make a movement toward Curtis. At that point 11 the officer had two choices. He had to make up his 12 mind instantly. Should he let the accused go to and 13 perhaps assault Curtis, who had said a moment before 14 that the officer could remove the accused, or should he 15 intervene? He chose the course that he was sworn to 16 uphold - he intervened. Nothing less could be done.
17 Had he not intervened, he would not have been 18 fulfilling his duty; the duty being to keep the peace 19 and, in this case, to prevent an assault on Curtis by 20 the accused. It is then that the fight between the 21 officer and the accused began.

22 Constable Hendriks might have used more force, but 23 he was under a duty to use reasonable force consistent 24 with the circumstances he was then facing. What he did 25 was, I find, to hold the accused for a few seconds, 26 four seconds at the most, against the wall and then he 27 released him. He gave him another opportunity to come

1 along peacefully. The accused, however, came at him,
2 requiring the officer to take more rigorous action 3 which resulted in the accused being pinned to the 4 floor. There really is no dispute in the evidence that 5 the events at that particular time happened in that way 6 and that Curtis helped to drag the accused out of the 7 home. Curtis said he did so to allow the accused to 8 get some fresh air. This placed the accused and 9 Constable Hendriks, who was alone, on the deck or porch
10 area. Constable Hendriks tried to talk to the accused 11 again. The accused asked the officer why he was doing 12 this. The officer responded that he would have to go 13 with him and sleep it off. The accused grabbed some 14 deck railing, described by Darla as being a fence. The 15 officer, in trying to effect the arrest, tried to pry 16 the accused's hand off the railing. That's when the 17 accused swung at the officer, according to the 18 Constable Hendriks. The officer says that he reacted 19 instantly by punching the accused in the face. The 20 accused went down to the deck floor with a nosebleed.

21 Constable Hendriks said that he arrested the 22 accused for "precluding the lawful use and enjoyment of 23 property." He said that he had to arrest the accused 24 as the accused obviously was not wanted by the people 25 in the home. This much, I find, was a fact. The 26 accused's sister and his brother apparently did not 27 want him in the home. It matters little whether or not

1 Curtis believed that charges would or would not be 2 laid; that is beside the point. Curtis wanted him out
3 of the home, as did Darla, by making the earlier call.

4 The accused was taken to the detachment. In 5 cross-examination, the officer was questioned in more 6 depth about the grounds for the arrest. He testified 7 that the accused was drunk, was swearing and was being 8 violent in the home. Defence counsel takes exception 9 to this. The defence argues that it is not lawful to 10 arrest someone where a peace officer attends at a home, 11 knocks, enters, and is told by the occupant, who may be 12 drunk and who may be swearing and loud, to leave. I 13 agree. That alone would not amount to reasonable and 14 probable grounds to effect an arrest of an occupant in 15 a home. But, as was said in the Godoy judgment, there 16 is more for the Court to consider. I have to consider 17 all the facts up to the point of the arrest, including 18 the telephone call. In my view, Constable Hendriks had 19 more than the threshold reasonable and probable grounds 20 to effect an arrest of the accused in the home.

21 In cross-examination, Constable Hendriks was 22 pressed as to the arrest even further, to which he 23 responded that he asked Curtis if he wanted the accused 24 out and Curtis gave an affirmative response. Constable 25 Hendriks was consistent in his testimony about why he 26 removed the accused, about why he attended there, and 27 his evidence is supported in part by that of Curtis,

1 one of the occupants of the home and someone who is 2 close to the accused. I have no reason to disbelief
3 Constable Hendriks. I accept his evidence as to why he 4 made the arrest. I find, as I said a moment ago, that 5 he had the necessary grounds.

6 Now, what about the arrest itself? When was it 7 made and what was said?

8 Constable Hendriks said that he made the arrest 9 for precluding the lawful enjoyment of property, or as 10 he said I believe in chief, "use and enjoyment of 11 property". The fact that the word "precluding" is not 12 in the Criminal Code of Canada is not material for the 13 purposes of determining whether or not the arrest was 14 lawful. What the officer communicated to the accused 15 is what is significant. What he communicated is that 16 the accused was interfering with the lawful use and/or 17 enjoyment of property. That's a crime under the 18 Criminal Code of Canada. We're not here to determine 19 whether or not there are more synonyms of preclude 20 which are consistent with the Criminal Code of Canada
21 than are inconsistent with it. This is not an English 22 class; it is not a grammar class. It is an exercise in 23 determining the realities of life consistent with the 24 law.

25 I continue with the cross-examination responses by 26 Constable Hendriks.

27 He told the accused why he was being arrested. (I

1 find that the words did at least meet the threshold of 2 being reasons for the arrest). The Constable testified 3 that the accused was obviously intoxicated, aggressive, 4 and there was a need to remove him in the interest of 5 the safety of the others, and also because the parents 6 were out of town and they had told him that they were 7 concerned. Could the officer have done anything else?
8 Could he have walked away and said: "All right, be 9 good, I have had a complaint to come to the home, I 10 have had a complaint of swearing, of violence, I have 11 witnessed with my own eyes swearing, I have witnessed 12 violence, but I am going to leave because you do not 13 want me here?" No. One could think of how terribly 14 upset reasonable members of the public would be if, 15 after the officer had left, the accused had continued 16 to be violent and verbally abusive to people. What if 17 he beat someone up? I could see all sorts of fingers 18 being pointed at the police for not fulfilling their 19 duty, and in my view the officer had a duty which he 20 adequately fulfilled. He did what had to be done; he 21 got an abusive drunk out of the home.

22 The evidence of Darla Rabesca supports the 23 evidence of Constable Hendriks. She testified that the 24 accused was in the home swearing but she tried to 25 ignore it. She tried to go back to bed hoping the 26 accused would go to sleep. She said in her words, "I 27 let it be." Then she says it got worse, which is my

1 interpretation of her testimony because she testified 2 that the accused was then picking on Curtis. He was 3 picking on Curtis, as she heard it, to have a fight
4 with him. She heard a commotion by or at Curtis'
5 room. She heard Curtis trying to calm the accused 6 down. She thought the accused was going to fight, so 7 she went down to the living room and that's when she 8 called the RCMP.

9 I find Darla Rabesca to be a highly credible
10 witness. She has come to court and given this damning 11 evidence against her own brother with whom she lives.
12 I assessed her demeanour when she testified. I am 13 completely satisfied that she was telling nothing but 14 the truth, and I am totally satisfied that she made no 15 effort to exaggerate or to invent evidence where she 16 may not have been clear about anything.

17 She testified that she told Constable Hendriks 18 that the accused was drinking in the home and that he 19 might have a fight with Curtis and to come over to talk
20 to the accused. This is the call that the officer 21 responded to and it was only when in the home that he 22 made the check with Curtis to find out if he wanted the 23 accused removed. Curtis did want the accused to 24 leave.

25 The officer did, however, try to talk to the 26 accused, as I have already remarked upon, but it didn't 27 work. Again I say what else could the officer have 1 done but to effect an arrest and remove the accused?

2 I find as a fact that the officer did communicate 3 words of arrest to the accused which the accused, 4 either through his intoxication cannot remember or 5 through some other reason is unprepared to 6 acknowledge.

7 The evidence of Curtis Rabesca is not persuasive
8 in some regards. A trier of fact, in this case myself, 9 is entitled to accept all of the evidence of a witness, 10 reject it all, or accept some but reject other parts of 11 it. I do not believe for one moment on the totality of 12 the evidence Curtis' testimony that the accused, when 13 the officer attended, was simply trying to go to sleep 14 or about to get ready for bed. I do not believe for a 15 moment that before the officer came the accused "was 16 just talking."

17 Where there is a conflict between the evidence of 18 Darla Rabesca and that of Curtis Rabesca, I far prefer 19 the evidence of Darla. It has the ring of truth to 20 it.

21 Curtis Rabesca would have the Court believe that 22 everything was okay until the police came. If 23 everything was okay, why did Darla phone the police?
24 It's beyond any doubt whatsoever that she did call the 25 police. Why else would the officer go there? Why 26 would she call? If she was trying to go to sleep 27 thinking that the accused would calm down but was

1 compelled to go to the living room to phone, it's 2 because things were not okay in the home. I find that 3 Curtis Rabesca was not being truthful with this Court.

4 The accused gave evidence. I find that where 5 there is conflict between his testimony and that of 6 other witnesses, that the accused was either
7 intentionally making evidence up or he has an imperfect 8 memory of what occurred due to his state of 9 intoxication during the night in question. I will now 10 explain why I say this.

11 During the first part of his evidence, the accused 12 said that he did not think he said anything to the 13 police officer upon arriving at the detachment. He 14 said that when he sobered up he told the officer that 15 when he got out he would tell the Chief and the Band 16 what the officer had done to him. But the evidence is 17 overwhelming that when the accused sobered up he was 18 anything but aggressive in any way. He was meek, he 19 was apologetic and he was crying.

20 I accept the evidence of the two guards about the 21 threatening behaviour of the accused during the early 22 stage at the detachment in the case of the one guard 23 and later in the case of the other. I believe that 24 later in the day when the accused made a threatening 25 remark, the Constable simply was out of earshot, but 26 the remark was heard by the matron.

27 The evidence of the accused that he was behaving

1 in a courageous and lawfully threatening way by telling 2 the officer what he would do when he got out flies in 3 the face of more plausible, more acceptable testimony 4 about how meek, mild, apologetic and weepy he was.

5 The accused testified that he did not make any 6 threats. In cross-examination, he testified that he 7 did not think he had been swearing at Curtis before the 8 officer arrived at the home other than perhaps calling 9 him an "asshole". Darla Rabesca would not have called 10 the police to attend and reported that the accused was 11 being violent because the accused called the brother an 12 "asshole". That's exactly the sort of thing that 13 Darla was trying to ignore but it didn't go away; it 14 got worse. I also detected a measure of evasiveness in 15 the accused's demeanour and manner of answering 16 questions.

17 Furthermore, what Constable Hendriks saw (I 18 touched on this earlier) regarding the accused starting 19 to go after Curtis, is perfectly consistent with 20 Darla's complaint about the accused trying to pick a 21 fight with Curtis before the officer arrived. It all 22 fits together. It fits together in the Crown's lap, 23 not in the defence lap.

24 The accused complains that inside the cell area
25 Constable Hendriks punched him for no apparent reason.
26 That testimony I do not accept. I do not accept it 27 because I do not believe very much at all of what the

1 accused testified about. I find he has come to this 2 courtroom making up a great big story to gain 3 affection, attention, and sympathy.

4 There is also the accused's testimony that he was 5 not brought before a J.P. I do not believe this. The 6 accused was caught, in my view, in a lie in this 7 courtroom. The Information is endorsed by Justice of 8 the Peace Coey to the effect that on March 5th, 1998, 9 the charges were read. I pointed that out to counsel.
10 I pointed that out after the accused had denied being 11 brought before to a J.P. I pointed it out obviously 12 then because I didn't know the accused would say that.
13 After he said that, I thought it might be significant.
14 I wanted the accused to have another opportunity to 15 reconsider that piece of his evidence. I do not 16 believe that Justice of the Peace Coey would falsify an 17 Information that she had read the charges if in fact 18 she had not done so. This accused, from start to 19 finish and throughout the middle, has come before this 20 Court with a string of false accusations which I 21 totally reject. In my view, the Crown might be on 22 solid footing in considering a perjury investigation
23 against the accused, but I leave that to the Crown. I 24 need not comment further.

25 I find the accused guilty of both offences. I 26 find that he made the threats. I find that he 27 assaulted the officer. I find the officer was lawfully

1 engaged in the execution of his duty. His duty was to 2 attend at the home, prevent the accused from going 3 after Curtis and to get the accused out of that home 4 because of the violent and abusive manner in which he 5 was behaving. For these reasons, Sir, I find you 6 guilty of both charges.

7 Is the defence ready to proceed to sentencing?

8 MR. STANG: Sir, I had hoped to have an 9 opportunity to speak with Mr. Rabesca for at least a 10 few minutes before proceeding to sentencing. I wasn't 11 sure whether Your Honour wanted to complete that 12 tonight or not.

13 THE COURT: It is late. I could complete it now
14 or in Yellowknife in May. I think it best to complete 15 it tonight, don't you?

16 MR. STANG: We certainly can, Sir. I would just 17 ask for a ten minute adjournment.

18 THE COURT: Yes.

19 (ADJOURNMENT)

20 THE COURT: Go ahead.

21 (SUBMISSIONS ON SENTENCE BY MR. COUPER)

22 (SUBMISSIONS ON SENTENCE BY MR. STANG)

23 THE COURT: I won't go over the facts again; I 24 did so in some detail during the judgment I gave 25 earlier. I thank the accused's father for what he had 26 to say. Because of what he had to say, I am not going 27 to make a firearm prohibition order. I am also led to

1 this conclusion by what the accused had to say a moment 2 ago and by what his lawyer had to say. The accused has 3 a traditional lifestyle even though he does have some 4 other employment sporadically. To make a firearm 5 prohibition order for someone who has never been 6 convicted of a firearm-related offence would, in these 7 circumstances, be harsh, unnecessary and undesirable.
8 I have dealt with this issue first because if I had 9 made a firearm prohibition order it would have been a 10 significant part of the punishment, in which case the 11 sentence of imprisonment would have been much less than 12 what I'm about to impose on the accused.

13 What should the period of imprisonment be? There
14 has to be imprisonment; nothing less will do. Nothing 15 less will get a message across to this accused who is 16 now convicted for the fourth and fifth times for crimes
17 against the police. Nothing less will do if the public 18 generally is to be discouraged from this sort of 19 unacceptable behaviour toward the police. Nothing less 20 will do to reflect in a proper way the disapproval of 21 the public, and by the public I do not mean only people 22 here in Wha Ti, I mean the public generally. Crimes
23 against the police are far too common. They are more 24 common in some communities than in others. I do not 25 have any statistics before me filed by the Crown or by 26 the defence as to how common this crime is here. In 27 the Delta where I spend most of my time, I am often

1 given statistics, and in those communities, like 2 Tuktoyaktuk, where this sort of criminal behaviour is 3 more common than in other parts of the Delta, sentences
4 tend to be more harsh for this sort of criminal 5 behaviour. The police are here to serve and to 6 protect, as I have already remarked in another matter 7 today. The fact that there is only one officer here is 8 something to take into account. What might happen if 9 the officer were taken out of commission through a 10 broken arm, a broken leg, or otherwise? Who would 11 there be to respond to emergency calls? The police 12 would have to fly in from elsewhere. There would be a 13 delay. The public would be at risk. The assault on 14 the officer cannot be characterized as a minor push or 15 a minor shove. It was of some consequence and it was a 16 blow aimed at the head of the officer. The threat was 17 to kill him and his family. His family consists of 18 himself and his wife. The Constable from time to time 19 is called out of the community in the course of his 20 work. His wife is alone. Who is to protect her? Who 21 can she call upon when she knows that her life has been 22 threatened? Is she to accompany her husband on duty?
23 Definitely not. This is another significance of this 24 officer being the only one in the community. When he's 25 gone, when there are threats like this, there is no one 26 to watch over his family.

27 I have taken into account the fact that the

1 accused received the worse of it during the fight. I
2 have taken into account the time in custody since March 3 5th, 1998. The time from then to now will count for 4 much more than the actual number of days because it is 5 a form of hard time, it being remand time.

6 The defence says that the total sentence, and I 7 have considered totality, ought to be no more than 8 three to five months imprisonment. The defence says 9 the sentence ought to be served together rather than 10 having one sentence added to the other. The defence 11 says there should not be too great a jump over the past 12 sentence of imprisonment. The accused received 36 days 13 imprisonment in 1995 for assaulting a peace officer.
14 In 1996 for the same type of crime, he received 45 15 days. That was little more than a hop. The time has 16 come for a jump. This will not be a tiny jump. There 17 has to be a significant jump in some cases where other 18 messages are not working and where it is necessary to 19 do so to protect the public.

20 The Crown says there ought to be a sentence of 21 about one year in total, along with a firearm 22 prohibition order, which I have already dealt with. In 23 my view, the range sought by the Crown would have been 24 appropriate were it not for the time in remand. There 25 will be four months imprisonment for assaulting the 26 Constable; there will be five months consecutive for 27 the threats, which is a different crime committed a

1 little bit later and at a different location. It is 2 more time than I have given for the assault. It is 3 more time because there are two victims, the officer 4 and his wife. There are few crimes more cowardly than 5 threatening to kill somebody's family. There will not 6 be any victim of crime surcharge given the apparent 7 hardship. The total is nine months.
