IN THE TERRITORIAL COURT OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

IN THE MATTER OF:

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

- v -

ELVIS JAMES JEREMICK'CA

*Original filed

Transcript of a Ruling on Voir Dire delivered by The Honourable Judge B.A. Bruser, in Yellowknife, in the Northwest Territories, on the 8th day of August, A.D. 2003.

APPEARANCES:

Ms. S. Smallwood:	Counsel for the Crown
Mr. J. Mahon :	Counsel for the Defence

Charges under ss. 129(a) C.C., 270(1) C.C. and 4(1) CDSA

1 THE COURT: This is a ruling in a voir dire.
2 The bulk of the evidence has been heard in this single 3 voir dire. If the evidence in the voir dire is not 4 admissible because of the Charter attack, the Crown 5 has no evidence upon which to seek a conviction on 6 either count.

7 The two charges are, Count 1, resisting Constable 8 Kosmenko, a peace officer engaged in the execution of 9 his duty, by physically resisting him. Count 2
10 alleges an assault on Constable Kosmenko, a peace 11 officer engaged in the execution of his duty. Both 12 counts arise from the same incident on February 9th, 13 2003, at the home of the accused in the City of 14 Yellowknife.

15 Two police officers testified for the 16 prosecution, and Mary Mantla, who lives common-law 17 with the accused, testified on behalf of the defence.

18 At the outset, it is instructive to address some 19 common law principles separate from the Charter.

20 In the case of Sanderson [2003] O.J. No. 1481, 21 there is at paragraph 29 reference to the case of 22 Waterfield. This is a leading case from England. It 23 is commented upon by the Supreme Court of Canada in 24 the Godoy judgment of 1999. The court in Godoy
25 commented upon the question of police entry. In 26 Sanderson, the judgment of Lamer C.J.C. in Godoy is 27 referred to in this way, with the Supreme Court

1 apparently following Waterfield:

2 The accepted test for evaluating the 3 common law powers and duties of the 4 police was set out in Waterfield... If 5 police conduct constitutes a prima facie
6 interference with a person's liberty or 7 property, the court must consider two 8 questions: first, does the conduct fall
9 within the general scope of any duty 10 imposed by statute or recognized at 11 common law; and second, does the conduct,
12 albeit within the general scope of such a 13 duty, involve an unjustifiable use of 14 powers associated with the duty.

15 I have this leading test in mind in my assessment 16 and weighing of the totality of the evidence in the 17 voir dire.

18 In the Godoy judgment, the Supreme Court at 19 paragraph 22 emphasized "that the intrusion must be 20 limited to the protection of life and safety". This 21 has to do with the forced entry into a dwelling house
22 in order to ascertain the health and safety of a 911
23 caller. A 911 caller is somebody making an emergency 24 call. We do not have a 911 number as such in 25 Yellowknife, although we do have an emergency number 26 for the RCMP.

27 I continue reading from paragraph 22:

1 The police have authority to investigate 2 the 911 call and, in particular, to 3 locate the caller and determine his or 4 her reasons for making the call and 5 provide such assistance as may be 6 required.

7 In the case before me, the police received a call 8 from their Operations Centre. I do not know with any 9 certainty if the call placed to the Operations Centre
10 was an emergency call or simply a call of a complaint 11 about something that had happened in the past. In any 12 event, Constables Kosmenko and Vesina located the 13 caller. They found him in a parking lot near the home 14 of where an alleged incident had occurred. The caller 15 was safe, and there was no need for the caller to be 16 escorted back to that home for any purpose connected 17 to his safety. Additionally, the caller does not 18 appear on the evidence to have had any lawful 19 proprietary interest over any aspect of the home
20 located at 632 Williams Avenue. I believe Constable 21 Kosmenko testified that the home was 632 Bigelow, but 22 I prefer the evidence of the other officer and of Mary 23 Mantla that it was 632 Williams Avenue. The street
24 discrepancy is, however, of no consequence.

25 I return to Godoy, paragraph 22:

26 The police authority for being on private 27 property in response to a 911 call ends

1 there. They do not have further 2 permission to search the premises or 3 otherwise intrude on a resident's privacy
4 or property. In Dedman at p. 35, Le Dain
5 J. stated that the interference with 6 liberty must be necessary for carrying 7 out the police duty and it must be 8 reasonable. A reasonable interference in 9 circumstances such as an unknown trouble 10 call would be to locate the 911 caller in 11 the home. If this can be done without 12 entering the home with force, obviously 13 such a course of action is mandated.
14 Each case will be considered in its own 15 context, keeping in mind all of the 16 surrounding circumstances.

17 I have the Godoy principles in mind in assessing 18 and weighing the evidence and issues before me.

19 In Dedman, referred to in Godoy, which in turn 20 was referred to in Sanderson, at page 119 there is the 21 following principle that I remain alive to. The best
22 I can do is to quote:

23 It has been held that at common law the 24 principal duties of police officers are 25 the preservation of the peace, the 26 prevention of crime, and the protection 27 of life and property, from which is

1 derived the duty to control traffic on 2 the public roads.

3 The last part of the principle has more to do with the 4 facts of that case, but the principle at the outset of 5 this quote remains applicable to what I have to deal 6 with.

7 Another principle that emerges from Dedman is the 8 fact that although the subject may comply with the 9 directions of the police, this does not by itself make 10 those directions lawful. People comply for many 11 reasons.

12 What circumstances did the police face? They 13 received a call from the Operations Centre. The 14 evidence, as I have remarked upon, is not clear as to 15 whether it was an emergency call or otherwise, 16 although they treated it as an emergency. They called 17 it a Code 3 and proceeded with lights, which I take to 18 be emergency lights, and siren activated. They knew 19 that the call had to do with an assault. They 20 believed it had to do with the use of a knife either 21 being actually used or being used to threaten someone.

22 The complainant was Anthony Mantla. They had 23 information as to where they would find the 24 complainant, and that location was not inside or at 25 that home but in a parking lot not far away.

26 They arrived there. Anthony Mantla was present.
27 The police did the proper thing by speaking to him to 1 determine more about what sparked the complaint. When 2 they talked to him, they became clear as to what house

3 it was where the alleged incident upon Anthony Mantla
4 had occurred. Up to this time, they had received 5 conflicting information as to the house number.

6 After talking to Anthony Mantla, they had reason 7 to suspect the accused. They had reason to believe 8 the accused was still in that home and was in there 9 with one other person. They attended the home. They 10 went to the door. They knocked and announced who they 11 were; these are two of the conditions precedent to 12 lawful entry into a home at common law. It is 13 conceded by the Crown that the police did not have a 14 warrant to enter into the home, nor did they have a 15 warrant for the arrest of the accused.

16 A further principle of law which flows from this 17 concession by the Crown, is that the entry by the two 18 officers into the home was prima facie unlawful 19 because it was contrary to common law and the Charter.

20 At the door, they confirmed the presence of the 21 accused and a woman who became known to them as Mary 22 Mantla. There was no indication of anybody else being 23 there, either by sound or by sight. They had no
24 reason to believe from their call from the Operations 25 Centre or from speaking to Anthony Mantla or from the 26 brief dealings at the door with Mary Mantla, that she 27 had been threatened or assaulted by the accused, or

1 that she was in any immediate risk of harm from the 2 accused.

3 Constable Vesina testified that he had heard
4 yelling of an aggressive sort from within the home
5 before the door opened, but that evidence does not go 6 so far as to suggest that the accused was yelling in 7 an aggressive way at Mary Mantla or that she was 8 yelling at him or, as should be apparent, that they 9 were yelling at each other.

10 By the time the police were at the door, which I 11 accept was partly ajar at the time they knocked, they 12 had no evidence of any aggression by the accused 13 toward Mary Mantla nor toward anyone else in the home, 14 there being nothing to indicate that there was a third 15 person there. When Constable Kosmenko knocked on the 16 door, it opened a bit further and Mary Mantla opened 17 it the rest of the way. At no time did the police 18 have express permission from her or from the accused 19 to enter. Mary Mantla testified that she remained at 20 the door until the police removed her from the home, 21 after she had told the police to leave. She testified 22 that she said this in Dogrib to the accused. There is 23 no suggestion that the RCMP understood Dogrib. She 24 says, however, that she did not want the police to 25 come in and that she was argumentative with them.
26 That's when they removed her from their home.

27 Constable Kosmenko testified that neither she nor

1 the accused objected to the presence of the police.

2 Here, I am reminded of the Dedman principle, that 3 the fact that somebody fails to object does not amount 4 to a concession, nor does it convert unlawful 5 behaviour by the police into lawful behaviour.

6 In particular, insofar as the circumstances 7 before me are concerned, the failure of Mary Mantla or 8 the accused (to take the evidence at its best from the 9 Crown's perspective) to object to the presence of the 10 police within their home does not make the presence 11 lawful.

12 Constable Kosmenko testified that because Mary 13 Mantla did not close the door on the police or 14 otherwise object, it suggested to him that she did not 15 object to their presence in the home. He conceded 16 that she did not give permission for them to enter.
17 She was agitated but not at the accused, and not 18 apparently by anything the accused had done to her, 19 but rather, according to Constable Kosmenko, by their 20 pursuit of the accused inside the home. This evidence 21 of Constable Kosmenko I find to be troubling. I trust 22 that it is not local RCMP policy to regard every 23 unclear objection as permission to enter into a home.
24 They have to follow the law by using a warrant or 25 relying upon the common law. I repeat again for the 26 sake of emphasis because it is very important: The 27 failure to object is not to be equated with express

1 consent. Leaving a door open is not, as Crown counsel 2 has suggested, an implied invitation to enter. The 3 sanctity of our homes is one of our most important and 4 cherished rights and freedoms. It would be a tragic 5 state of affairs in our free and democratic society if 6 it could be successfully argued that by leaving our 7 doors open or partly open, the agencies of the 8 government could enter into our homes and argue 9 implied consent. I know we have not arrived at this 10 stage and I trust that this country will never get to 11 that point. It would be an affront to our Charter of 12 Rights and Freedoms.

13 I conclude up to this point in my judgment that 14 (a) as conceded by the Crown, the entry was without 15 warrant and therefore prima facie unlawful, and (b)
16 the entry was without consent and at common law 17 unlawful (apart from exigent circumstances).

18 There is, however, the issue of whether exigent 19 circumstances make the entry lawful, notwithstanding 20 the warrantless entry and notwithstanding the absence
21 of consent. Hot pursuit is not before me. If there 22 is anything to be made of exigent circumstances, it 23 would have to be on the basis that the police, within 24 the Godoy judgment, were required to intrude for the 25 protection of life and safety. The two officers 26 indicated in their view that it was a high risk 27 situation and that they had to enter for exactly this

1 purpose.

2 Has the Crown satisfied the burden to justify the 3 warrantless entry and entry without consent? That is 4 the issue to resolve at this point.

5 As I indicated before, the alleged victim was not 6 Mary Mantla but was Anthony Mantla. Anthony Mantla
7 was safe. He was away from the home.

8 I disagree with the evidence of the high risk
9 characterization as testified to by Constables
10 Kosmenko and Vesina. In my view, the high risk 11 situation was created when the police entered the home 12 unlawfully. They entered the home contrary to the 13 Charter, contrary to the Criminal Code of Canada, and 14 contrary to the common law. There were not present 15 the sort of exigent circumstances contemplated by the 16 Supreme Court of Canada in Godoy. The situation
17 regarding any concerns for the safety of Mary Mantla 18 or of the accused could easily have been clarified at 19 the doorway. They had nothing to indicate that 20 anybody else was present. The opportunity to 21 determine if anybody else was jeopardized could have 22 been dealt with at the doorway. The Operations Centre 23 communication did not indicate to them that any other 24 person was in jeopardy, nor did Anthony Mantla or 25 Mary Mantla, nor was there any indication when the 26 police had a clear view inside the home.

27 There was also nothing to indicate to the police

1 that the accused was armed. One officer said that he 2 could not get a clear view around Mary Mantla, and the 3 other officer said that it did not appear that the 4 accused had any weapons on him. Constable Vesina put 5 it this way: The accused was sitting on the stairs
6 that led to the second floor. He had no shirt and no 7 weapon was in sight. He added that only after they 8 entered did they learn that everyone was safe.

9 But they have another problem on the evidence.
10 (Perhaps they had more information that is not before 11 me.) The problem has to do with timing. I have 12 already alluded to this in exchanges with counsel 13 during submissions. I will tie it together now.

14 The call placed to them from the Operations
15 Centre did not say when this incident had occurred.
16 The police seemed to guess that it had recently 17 occurred or was ongoing. They didn't know. Surely, 18 if it were ongoing, that message would have been 19 passed on to them. They were, I find, engaged in some 20 high-stakes guesswork at that point. They had the 21 opportunity when talking to Anthony Mantla to ask him 22 when the event regarding the knife had occurred. The 23 evidence does not touch on this in any way. Mary 24 Mantla, whose evidence I do not reject, says that 25 Anthony Mantla was expelled from the home at around 26 2:00 a.m. The police attended after 2:30 p.m. I do 27 not find a basis to reject her evidence. She was

1 apparently intoxicated at the time to some degree, but 2 that by itself is not a basis to reject somebody's 3 testimony.

4 At the door, the accused did not appear to be 5 angry at Mary Mantla nor to be directing any anger
6 towards somebody not in plain view.

7 For these reasons, I do not accept this to have 8 been an exigent circumstance within the Supreme Court 9 of Canada principles. It may have had an element of 10 urgency to it. I grant the Crown that much as a 11 possibility. But I do not find, given that the onus 12 is on the Crown to justify the reasons for entering 13 the home, the sort of situation in which justification 14 is made out.

15 After the police entered the home unlawfully, 16 they proceeded to arrest the accused who was starting 17 to move toward his kitchen. The accused apparently 18 did not want the police there, and as soon as they 19 grabbed him when he started to move to the kitchen, 20 the struggle was on. The accused was in these 21 circumstances entitled to regard the police as 22 trespassers. He was entitled to take reasonable steps 23 to eject the police from his home. The one punch to 24 the face of the police officer, given their superior 25 sizes and their numbers, was not unreasonable nor was 26 it excessive. What I conclude from all of this is 27 that when the police were arresting the accused, they

1 were not engaged in the lawful execution of their 2 duty. The law says that a person who is a trespasser
3 who refuses to leave can be ejected with reasonable 4 force. This is all the accused was attempting to do.
5 I do not know if he was attempting to get a knife in 6 the kitchen. The police feared he might have been.
7 He would not have moved into his kitchen and the 8 situation would not have developed as it did had the 9 police not been there. I most certainly cannot find 10 the arrest to have been lawful merely because the 11 police had a suspicion that the accused may have been 12 going into the kitchen to get a knife to use against 13 them.

14 I probably do not even have to be analyzing the 15 arrest issue in the detail in which I have been 16 analyzing it, but I am doing so because this is taking 17 me to section 495 of the Criminal Code. Defence
18 counsel quickly skirted over section 495. I think it 19 is deserving of more attention. I intend to give it 20 that attention.

21 Section 495 allows the police to arrest in 22 certain circumstances a person without a warrant.
23 They are not permitted to do that where they lack 24 reasonable grounds. Quoting from 495(2)(d):

25 A peace officer shall not arrest a person 26 without warrant for...in any case where 27 (d) he believes on reasonable grounds

1 that the public interest, having 2 regard to all the circumstances 3 including the need to 4 (i) establish the identity of the 5 person,
6 (ii) secure or preserve evidence of or 7 relating to the offence, or 8 (iii) prevent the continuation or 9 repetition of the offence or the 10 commission of another offence, 11 may be satisfied without so arresting the 12 person.

13 Paragraph (e) is not applicable.

14 The police knew who the accused was, or certainly 15 had the means to know that from Anthony Mantla and/or 16 from Mary Mantla. They knew where he lived. They did 17 not have to go into the home or arrest him to secure 18 or preserve evidence. They did not have to arrest 19 him, I find, contrary to their testimony, to prevent 20 the continuation or repetition of the offence. Again, 21 the victim as alleged of the previous offence could 22 not have been further victimized by the accused. The 23 police were there. The so-called victim was out of 24 the home and the accused was in the home.

25 Where am I heading with the discussion of 26 subsection (2)? I am heading into subsection 495(3).
27 This is the significance of analyzing the section.

1 Subsection (3) provides that notwithstanding the 2 factors I have referred to in subsection (2), a peace 3 officer is "deemed to be acting lawfully and in the 4 execution of his duty". That subsection, however, can 5 be trumped in the circumstances of an appropriate case
6 by the Charter of Rights. Where there is a conflict
7 between a provision of the Charter and subsection (3), 8 the Charter, being the supreme law of the land, 9 prevails. Subsection (3) cannot be argued by the 10 Crown successfully because of the findings I have made 11 regarding the violations under the Charter. This is 12 the significance of section 495 and the discussion of 13 it.

14 I conclude, by way of summary: (a) the entry
15 into the home violated section 8 of the Charter and it 16 also amounted to a violation of section 7; and (b)
17 that nothing that happened after the police unlawfully 18 entered converted their trespassing into a lawful 19 presence nor gave them the duty to arrest the accused 20 inside his home.

21 The remedy options have been argued by counsel.
22 I need not hear from them further.

23 I agree with Crown counsel that a stay of 24 proceedings would be an exceptional remedy only to be 25 ordered in the clearest of cases. Despite my 26 findings, I do not conclude that what the police were 27 up to in entering the home had in any way to do with

1 bad faith or any other improper reason. They were 2 well-motivated, but their motivation was misguided and 3 misdirected.

4 I conclude that a stay would be too exceptional a 5 remedy in the circumstances of this case. The remedy, 6 given that the evidence of the entry and of the arrest 7 was in a voir dire, is to exclude the evidence. If 8 all the evidence of the entry and of the arrest and 9 the so-called resist and assault is excluded, the 10 Crown has no case, in which case the matter will be 11 dismissed. That, in my view, is the appropriate way 12 to proceed. Accordingly, I dismiss the charge on the 13 basis that there is simply no evidence for the trier 14 of fact to consider. I do not need in these 15 circumstances a no evidence motion. It follows from 16 the way this matter has proceeded that there cannot be 17 a conviction on either count.

18 The defence has sought costs. It is open to the 19 accused to commence a civil proceeding for damages and 20 for costs. This is up to him to decide, and it 21 certainly is not up to me to decide what would happen 22 should he pursue that recourse. But it is open to 23 him.

24 In a criminal proceeding, costs are to be awarded 25 in the context of a punitive message. It is not every 26 case in which where there is a successful Charter 27 motion that costs will automatically follow. The

1 prosecutor says, and I am inclined to agree with her,
2 that for an award of costs there should be something 3 to show improper prosecutorial discretion or some 4 other improper conduct on the part of the Crown.
5 There is not that sort of conduct or exercise of 6 discretion in this case. The Crown also says that the 7 RCMP officers were acting in good faith. I have 8 already remarked upon this. They were mistaken, 9 misguided and misdirected, but they followed good 10 faith and were primarily concerned about doing their 11 duty. They went too far, however, in the execution of 12 that duty. This is not a case in which to order costs 13 against the Crown. And as for the RCMP, I leave it to 14 the accused to decide what he thinks is appropriate, 15 but I do not find it appropriate to order costs in 16 this action.

17 The defence says this is the clearest of cases of 18 police misconduct. I do not agree.

19 The charges, Mr. Jeremick'ca, are dismissed for 20 the reasons I have given.
